

JUSTICE STATISTICS - FIRST RESULTS

Case flow in the administrative and tax 1st instance courts (2015-2019)

1. Overall flow of new, completed and pending cases

In 2019, in the administrative and fiscal courts of first instance, the total number of new cases was 27.335 and the total number of completed cases was 29.018. At 31 December 2019, the number of pending cases¹ in these courts was 67.240 (table 1).

Table 1 - Total of new, completed and pending cases, 2019

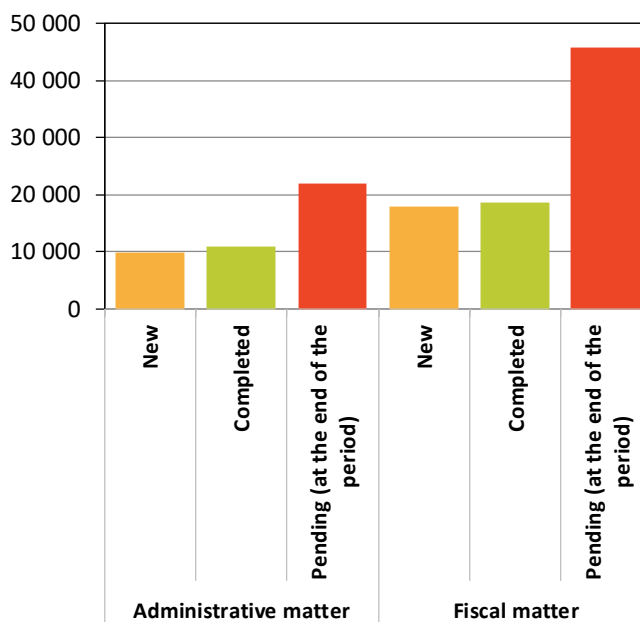

Table 2 - New, completed and pending cases, by matter, 2019

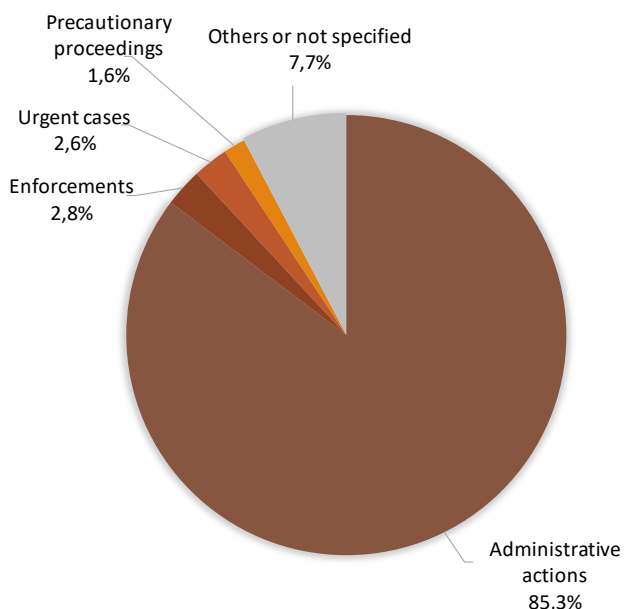

At the administrative level, the number of new cases was 9.590 and the number of completed cases was 10.670. At 31 December 2019, the number of pending administrative cases was 21.782. Regarding fiscal matters, the number of new cases was 17.745 and the number of completed cases was 18.348. At 31 December 2019, the number of pending fiscal cases was 45.458 (table 2).

2. Most representative procedural types in administrative and fiscal matters

With respect to the most representative types of pending administrative cases, in 2019, it is possible to affirm that 85.3% corresponded to administrative actions, 2.8% to enforcement actions, 2.6% to urgent cases and 1.6% to precautionary proceedings (table 3).

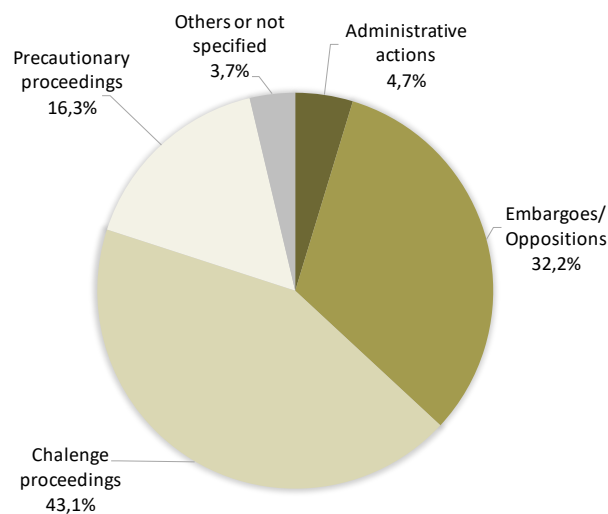

Table 3 - Pending administrative cases, by type, 2019

Considering the most representative types of pending fiscal cases in 2019, it is possible to affirm that 43.1% corresponded to challenge proceedings, 32.2% to embargoes/oppositions, 16.3% to administrative appeals and 4.7% to administrative actions (table 4).

Table 4 - Pending fiscal cases, by type, 2019

3. Procedural balance, clearance rate and disposition time, by subject, 2015-2019

In 2019, the number of completed cases was higher than the number of new cases (table 5). The favourable balance of 1,080 less administrative cases and 603 less fiscal cases (in a total of 1,683 less cases) justifies the decrease in the pendency of administrative cases of 4.7% and a decrease of 1.3% in fiscal cases, corresponding to an overall decrease in pendency of 2.4%. In 2018, the overall decrease in the pendency of 3.7% was due to the decrease of the pendency by around 4.0% in fiscal cases and of around 3.0% in the administrative cases.

Table 5 - Procedural balance (new cases - completed cases), by matter, 2015-2019

The clearance rate² (table 6), which measures the capacity of the system in a given year to meet the demand during the same period, in 2019 was of 111.3% for the administrative cases and of 103,4% for the fiscal cases (corresponding to an overall value of 106.2%).

Table 6 - Clearance rate, by matter, 2015-2019

On the other hand, the disposition time³ (table 7), which is an indicator that measures the time that would be necessary to complete all the cases that are pending at the end of a given period, considering the rhythm of work accomplished in that same period, in 2019 was of 745 days for the administrative cases and 904 days for the fiscal cases (corresponding to an overall value of 845 days).

4. Average duration of the completed cases in the administrative and fiscal courts of 1st instance, by matter, 2018-2019

The average duration⁴ of the completed cases in the administrative and fiscal courts of 1st instance increased by seven months, between 2018 and 2019. In the fiscal matter, during the period in question, there was an increase from 37 to 44 months. In administrative matters, there was an increase in the average duration of the completed cases from 25 to 30 months (table 8).

Footnotes:

¹ The pending cases correspond to cases that have not yet received the final decision in the form of judgment, sentence or order, in their respective instance, regardless of res judicata. These cases are thus awaiting the practice of acts or diligences by the court, the parties or other entities and may also, in certain types of cases, await for certain facts to occur or the expiration of a time. A suspended case is, for example, a pending case, irrespective of the cause of suspension. A pending case is not necessarily a case in delay, such as the case of those being handled within the legal timelines.

² The clearance rate corresponds to the ratio of the total volume of cases completed over the total volume of new cases entered. Being equal to 100%, the volume of new cases was equal to the one of the completed ones, therefore, the variation of the pendency is null. If it is higher than 100%, a recovery of the pendency occurred. The higher this indicator, the greater will be the recovery of the pending in that year. If it is lower than 100%, the volume of new cases was higher than the one of the completed cases, therefore generating pendency.

⁴ The average duration of a completed case in the court is the period of time between the date of its beginning and the date in which the case was completed, even if it was redistributed, i.e., between the date of commencement of the case in the court where it entered and the date of completion of the case in this or in another court to which it was redistributed. The concept of average duration used in this statistical highlight corresponds to the also called duration of the initial case, by adding the duration in the various courts by where it passed. The average duration of completed cases corresponds to the average duration of cases completed in the year in question, and can therefore be determined by the completion of older cases.

Framing notes:

The data presented were collected from the computer system of the administrative and fiscal courts, representing the status of the cases registered in that system.

The data for 2019 are of a provisional nature and may be altered as a result of quality control and updates made to the computer system of the administrative and fiscal courts.
